Bankers Simmons and Pell Find No Friends Willing to Go Them Bail.

Escorted from Their Cells to the District-Attorney's Via the Bowery.

Very few of the people who hastened along the Bowery this morning on their way to business were aware that they had for their fellow-wayfarers two of Gotham's most distinguished bank-wreckers. James A. Simmons and George H. Pell. Lenox Hill Bank, were the meek. They had spent the night in the big cell at Police Headquarters and were out for an early walk in the cold, bracing air with significant bid for support, by the issue of Detective Sergts. Phil Reilly and Tom his Labor Rescript, the results of the elec-cell. The cold, biting wind seemed to do them lots of good, however, and when they reached the District-Attorney's office at 9,30 o'clock their cheeks and noses were of a decidedly ruddy hue, and they had regained some of their 'old-time cheer-tulness.

Mr. Simmons was inclined to be talkative: "We might have done well to take Detective Ridley's advice," he said, "to go to the Tomba. The quarters up in Mulberry street are certainly not the most comfortable in the world. However, we will soon be out of this, I hope. "This is all a great mistake. We are not guilty of any crime, and are only anxious to have these cases brought to trial, so that our innocence can be proven.

trial, so that our innocence can be proven.

"I am about the only one who has suffered in this whole business, which is due to the careless banking methods of those interested in that branch of our enterprise. I don't mention any names, but they have tangled matters up so that it ruined everything."

Mr. Pell did not say much, but seemed confident that he would come out all right in the end, and declared that he was not afraid to stand trial. At that hour none of his friends had been to see him to-day, but he expected to be able to furnish acceptable bondsmen before non. Simmons was equally confident.

It was learned that they had both secured bondsmen several days ago in anticipation of the present contingency, but that they had all been arrested so late in the day that they had no time to notify their friends to come in and quality, except in the case of Charles H. Wallack, who got off on hail last night through the

It was stated that several prominent downtown corporations were ready to go on Simmons's bond.

Assistant District-Attorney Vernon H. Davis said this morning that he was going to consult with United States District-Attorney Mitchell to-day with regard to the further prosecution of those engaged in the bank-wrecking conspiracy.

"We will sift this matter to the very bottom, and will look into the Sixth National Bank affair as well as the Lenox

National Bank affair as well as the Lenox Hill.

"If National bank officers are guilty of violating the State laws, as by comting larceny for instance, they can be prosecuted by the State authorities as well as the United States authorities who get their jurisdiction under the National banking laws.

"My opinion of this case is that the gobbling of the Lenox Hill Bank was an eract counterpart of the scheme to get control of the Sixth National, and that they sventually intended to capture the Western National. They were in need of all the banks they could get hold of to back up their Nicaragua Canal scheme.

"Mr. Jordan assw what they were after, and grabbed them by the throat just in time to check the raid on his bank. It was certainly one of the boldest schemes on record, and how they advanced so far as they did without being detected is a mystery to all those who have investigated the matter."

At 1 o'clock the two prisoners were still quartered in Assistant District Attorney Sample's office, waiting for their bondsmen to show up.

Ex-Judge Donohue, their counsel, visited them and a brother of President Coursed N. Jordan, who, it is said, is an old friend of Simmons, and several other acquaintances dropped in to condole with the unfortunates.

President Coursed N. Jordan looked happy in his office in the Western National Bank this moraing. Mr. Jordan aid that the Isanc Hill Bank was fully reopened for business to day.

If the depositors came back it would be all right, but, of course, the bank would not work for nothing, but he thought from last night's meeting there would not be any difficulty.

Speaking of the actions of the Grand Jury yesterday, he arpressed himself as pleased "if they succeed, but"— Here if, Jordan smiled and shook his head significantly.

What did you think about Mr. Philip L. Meyer's story, Mr. Jordan "Meyer is an ars, and his brother as worse. The idea of his answering the District Attorney in the way he did. And Mr. Jordan walked away, smilling pleasantly as he contemplated the predictions of the wreckers of the Lebox Hill Bank.

marked 17 degrees on the Signal Service thermometer.

The rest of the cold wave will arrive to morrow morning, and the Sergeant says that the temperature will drop to 15 degrees, with strong chances of touching the 10-degree mark. It may go even lower than that.

The entire country has felt the effects of the cold, except in the Northwest. It is a little warmer there to-day, the thermometer only registering 30 degrees below zero at Fort Buford.

In Chicago the mercury dropped to 4 degrees, probably on account of the cold weather settling about their chances of securing the World's Fair. In Oswego and Albany, in this State, the temperature ranges from 6 to 7 degrees. Boston, 8; 8t. Louis, 14; New Orleans, 56; Philadelphia, 22 and Key West, 72.
